Fashion and fashion-related industries are the nation’s largest employer. Fashion design involves work with the design and production of clothing, whether with a large manufacturer, a small specialty firm or in a one-person business. Fashion merchandising refers to the large task of in-store promotion and the display of various types of fashion merchandise.

ARC follows industry needs by offering two program options: Fashion Design and Fashion Merchandising. Fashion design prepares the student with those skills necessary to coordinate original design concepts with manufacturing and merchandising techniques. Fashion Merchandising provides training for jobs in fashion coordinating, promotion, visual presentation, management, merchandising or ready-to-wear garments.

Career Opportunities

Careers in fashion design include designer, pattern maker and custom dressmaker. Careers in fashion merchandising include buyer, store owner, manufacturer’s sales representative, fashion coordinator, fashion illustrator or visual merchandiser.

Fashion Design

Fashion Design prepares the student with those skills necessary to coordinate original design concepts with manufacturing, marketing and merchandising techniques.
