Technical Communication is one of the fastest growing professions in the Sacramento region and the country. The Sacramento chapter of the Society for Technical Communication, the professional organization of technical communicators, is also growing rapidly. Although a degree or certificate is not always required for someone entering the profession, having one is an advantage in the competitive job market. The Technical Communication program at American River College is designed for students desiring a two-year degree or certificate, for those who will transfer to earn BA degrees, or for employees who want to upgrade their skills.

Technical communicators work in business, industry, and government as technical writers, Web designers, and multimedia artists. They work on a wide variety of writing projects, including, formal reports, instructions and procedures, grants, feasibility studies, proposals, technical manuals, scientific reports, computer documentation, training manuals, and marketing materials. Online information technology, including Web publishing and digital graphics, is a major trend in the profession. Consequently, Technical Communication program at American River College combines courses from three academic areas: Technical Writing, Computer Information Science, and Art New Media.

What skills do technical communicators need? Technical Communicators must analyze information and communicate it clearly to their readers. They must comprehend complex systems and summarize them simply. Good writing, research, and editing skills are paramount. Technical communicators must be able to think critically and logically, working independently and on teams. They must be comfortable with technology and be proficient with computers. They must be able to manage writing projects and meet deadlines.
